sere generally unchanged.

The reports have arrived from the wreck of the Royal Charter. In their account of the calamity they state that the strain being too reat for the cables, a sailor swam ashore and made fast a hawser, by which several lives were saved. More might have been rescued had not the vessel broken up so soon. She parted with a dreadful crash, and the passengers and crew were either killed by e falling masts or perished in the waves. Four hundred and seventy persons were lost and only thirty-out of all the multitude a board were saved! All the women on board perished.

The only part of this ill-fated ship left sanding on Wednesday evening, was a small part of her stern, with the wheel and screw ifting aparatus. She struck at 3 o'clock a Wednesday morning, and broke up at 7 clock. Before striking her cables parted. She had tried to steam off the coast, but the wind blowing a hurricane she drifted ashore hante of every effort to save her.

Several bodies had washed ashore, but hemajority of them were greatly mutilated. Men were engaged in picking up sovereigns dibe rocks where her treasure was scattered, and an efficient guard to protect the property was much needed. The bullion, it was extested, would be recovered.

Additional returns of the election in the State of New York on Tuesday, justify the belief that the republican candidate for State fice are elected, but probably by a smaller asjecty that at first reported. Both branes of the Legislature will undoubtedly be largly Republican.

RAILROAD CONNEXION BETWEEN ALEXAN-DRIA AND WASHINGTON .- By the first of January next, the extension of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad will be finished, as well as any small gap that may still exist on the other end of the route-towards New Orleans. Already the time between this city and New Orleans has been shortened to four and a half days; which accounts for the ington. When these gaps shall be obviahalf days; giving the traveler an advantige of two and a half days less travelling time between New York and New Orleans than by any other route-and over a series of railroads unsurpassed in America in the sum of comforts of all descriptions they afford to the travelling public.

There will then remain but a single drawback to deter the Southwestern travel from patronizing the route almost exclusively. That drawback is the present means of connection between the depots in Washington and Alexandria. As to obviate this difficulty will amount to an insurance that in the course of the next season's travel it will be no uncommon thing to find perhaps two thousand through travellers passing over the route in a day, (four trips,) it is very certain that the two railroad companies immediately interested will promptly obviate the only remaining difficulty in the way of securing the great rush of travel above refered to-taking it from the Pennsylvania and Ohio route, and the New York Central and Illinois Central route, from which the inrese of from fifty to, on some occasions, five hundred a day, has already come.

Three or four plans for removing the difficulty existing here, are now doubtless being earnestly considered by the two companies; one of which bodes no good to the future of this city. That is, the plan of branching off from the Baltimore and Washington Railroad at or near Bladensburg, and striking the Potomac opposite Alexandria, which the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company can lawfully do.

The extreme length and certain heavy cost of constructing a continuous railroad over the Potomac at the Three Sisters, and thence to connect with the Alexandria passenger road, or run direct to the Orange and Alexandria railroad's Alexandria depot, is evidently viewed by the parties interested as being well nigh an insuperable objection to that route; while the great expense of getting a foundation for a railroad bridge over the site of the present Long Bridge, the certainty that is use as a railroad bridge, will almost entirely destroy its availability as a bridge to be used by ordinary vehicles, and the fact that the chances are at least even that just when one or the other Long Bridge draw might be required to be shut to admit the passage of trains, the requirements of the river's commerce would demand them opened, are very serious drawbacks to the plan of using the Long Bridge-covenanted by deed, by the by, to be kept up by the Government as a bridge for ordinary travel. Considerations such as these, give rise to the plan of avoiding this city altogether in making the permanent connection that will surely be consummated in some way, in less, perhaps, than six months.

The fourth plan, which strikes us as embracing most advantages, is that of extending the track of the Washington Branch Railroad to Buzzard's Point, either across Pennsylvania avenue and down the canal until reaching a convenient place from which to strike direct to the Point, or via the ravine back of the Capitol or again, by tunneling the base of Capitol Hill; the extension to be traveled only by horse cars, if Congress thinks proper to impose that already antiquated obstruction to the completeness of the connection. one-tenth the cost by any other plan. Buzzard's Point it is proposed to comboats like those in use at Havre de Grace, Md., to the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company's wharf in Alexandria; the distance being less than four miles, the depth of water at lowest tides never less than fifteen feet, and the courses of navigation such as that no fog on the Potomae can ever hereafter cause a failure of mail connection in due time. The time saved between the depots via Buzzard's, Point, will be quite as much as could possibly be saved by a continuous railway connected either around Washington via the Three Sisters, or by crossing the Long Bridge, subject to the usual delays at the draws.

The ferry boat should be prepared to face the ice in winter, which, below the Arsenal, it will be remembered, is never so serious an obstacle to steamers as above that point .-Another advantage of this route is the fact that it suits the grades of all the streets, as established; yet another advantage of the selection of that route, is the fact that by the first of April the work on it can be finished -a great desideratum to the companies to make the improvement .- Wash. Star.
